COURSE DESCRIPTION

This course will deal with Central Asia during three historical epochs-late medieval, modern and contemporary. By investigating the emergence of new political orders in the area, around 1220, then in 1500, later in the 1870's, again in 1920, and since 1990, we will try to establish the balance between the two sets of causes shaping this history : structural forces and events themselves. In order to discuss the latter, we will conduct a survey of the sequence of peoples, states and rulers in the area. When appropriate, slides will be used.

LECTURES AND SECTIONS

The class meeting will include both lectures and discussions. For the latter to be useful instead of mutually frustrating, the assigned readings must be done on time. Attendance in sections is mandatory. It comes part of the final grade : 15%.
